

4 years is a blink in your lives.

This opportunity you have is only given to a very small population of people. When it's over, it's over.

1. Sacrifices are ALWAYS rewarded in the end. The healthy eating. The sleep. The staying away from distractions. All of those things will make you better. Think of it as a reverse "diet"... Every time you eat a donut, you pack on some extra weight (hey, I'm a girl... This is what I relate to). Every time you sacrifice you gain more of something... Perspective...strength...camaraderie...what ever it is, the end result is always worth the sacrifice.

Put it this way... You will never regret sacrificing, but you always wonder what the lack of sacrifice caused you to miss out on.

2. The boys, French fries, and late night parties will always be there. When this season is over, it's gone.

3. If you can out-sacrifice a team off the court, you can usually outplay them on the court
